Kazakhstan is the largest country in the world which has no access to the World Ocean, however the territory of Kazakhstan is washed by land-locked seas: the Caspian and Aral. Major part of the country are horizonless steppes, deserts and mountains that house thousands of species of animals and birds. The nature of Kazakhstan is beautiful in its own way. It is severe, since the majority of the territory consists of deserts (44%) and semi-deserts (14%). Only 26% of the territory is occupied by steppe zones and 5.5% by forest. More than six thousand of plant species vegetate in Kazakhstan, about 500 species of birds, 178 species of animals, 49 species of reptiles, 12 species of amphibians may be encountered in its spaciousness and about 100 species of fishes – in the rivers and lakes. The nature of Kazakhstan is various, its desert massive is immense and its mountain peaks are high and harsh. The country's flora and fauna are represented by various species of rare and unique animals and plants, many of which are entered in the Red Book.
